And just like that, the time to plan for Thanksgiving has arrived! Why does the holiday season always seem to take us by surprise? Just yesterday summer was in full bloom. Today we're suddenly preparing for holiday meals and gatherings. With the hustle and bustle of the holiday season, safety often takes a back seat. From basic food handling to scheduling downtime, we're sharing our Thanksgiving safety tips for seniors.

Promoting Thanksgiving food safety
Did you know turkeys account for 8% of food-borne illnesses each year? And, of course, these cases surge around Thanksgiving! But you need to be careful around more than just the turkey. These Thanksgiving safety tips for food handling can help you make the most out of the best time of year!

Rinsing meat can make you ill – You may think washing your turkey (or any meat) increases safety, but the CDC has recommended against turkey washing since 2005. Rinsing meat spreads bacteria, like salmonella, to kitchen surfaces, nearby food or your clothing.

Keep it clean – Germs are especially dangerous for uncooked sides, like salad or cranberry sauce. Regularly disinfect kitchen surfaces, hands and any cooking tools you use.

Thanksgiving leftovers are the best – What would Thanksgiving be without leftovers? Reduce the time the food spends in the “danger zone” by clearing dinner off the table within two hours.

Store those leftovers properly – Cut turkey into small portions you can store in separate containers that cool more quickly in the fridge. And make sure you eat leftovers within three to four days to reduce the risk of harmful bacteria!
